Honorong, November 24th, 1873.

In is to be regretted that the large bulk of the information which we have about China, is kong. derived only to a very moderate extent from the personal knowledge of those who supply it. The works hitherto published on China, able as they undoubtedly are, in many respects, fail to convey a truthful picture of the nature of Society, in consequence of their aiming too much at explaining it from theoretical notions of Government-founded upon a someciples as set forth in the Chinese Classics, and as enunciated by the official and great peril of foundering. better educated natives, all more or less interested in making the government able light. The theory of government in China differs so widely from its practice, that any conclusions derived exclusively from the former must necessarily be in a great-measure deceptive. This fact has, indeed, been felt by all writers on China, and a very superficial acquaintance with the works which have been published must show any ordinarily thoughtful reader that, throughout them there is a tendency, rather to explain away inconsistencies, than to demonstrate from facts what is the nature of the government actually existent in the country.

the best authorities on Chinese matters, once observed that China presented the strange spectacle of a nation whose Government is. in theory, the most autocratic, and in practice, the most democratic of any in the world —a remark borne out by the statements of other good authorities. The explanation of the apparent anomaly is, however, more simple than is generally supposed. It consists in the fact that the one form of government is imaginary, and the other real. Court's finding on this head would have been The question is: Is the attorney properly re-The Chinese, with that love of antiquity and veneration for precedent, which form so distinguishing a characteristic of the nation, have kept up the theory of a paternal system, while they have found in practice the neces: sity of departing from it. The complete subordination of the higher officials to the Supreme Authority, of the lower officials to those above them, and of the people to all authorities has now-as would, indeed, appear to have been the case for a length of years-no more existence than the kingly power, such as it was in the time of the Normans, has in England at the present day. In China, as is the case everywhere, the popular element has been in antagonism to the governing element. To such an extent has the latter succeeded in asserting itself that, as observed by Mr. WADE, there is in practice no country so democratic as China. But it must be observed that this

"democracy" is not of a kind to attract the admiration even of those who lean towards a Republican form of Government, but may be most accurately described as the perpetrated existence of that state of Society verging upon anarchy, at which in Western countries the necessity for protection causes the extreme of democracy to touch upon Imperialism, and in the majority of instances, to become transmuted into a monarchical form of government. Such are the conclusions to which any impartial observer of the facts existing in China must arrive; and, however much these facts conflict with the theory of government as set forth in books, they are all upon which those who wish to become really acquainted with the nature of the country and of its administration, or even to form just views of passing political events, can rely. We do not deny the importance of an acquaintance with the literature of the Chinese, but so far as a knowledge of the true state of affairs in the country is concerned, it is important rather as affording an index to the mind of the Chinese, and as showing the theories upon which they rely, than as indicative of the manner in which the government of the country is actually carried on.

CONVERTING THE MOORS.

There is an excellent story told of a missionary who was bent on converting the Moors to Protestantism. But as he knew no Arabic, and not one Moor out of a hundred in Taugier knows five words of English, or one out of twenty sufficient Spanish to comprehend a sermon in that tongue, the missionary was obliged to engage the services of a well known Jew, a worthy descendant of his forefathers, to expound and explain to the Moors, by means of verbat translations, the tidings which he came to impart. This Jew, Benoni by name, willingly undertook the duty, with the accompanying emolument, but informed his employer that it was the custom of the country, on the occasion of any sort of gathering, for the promoters to offer refreshment, in the shape of coffee, to all who might have assembled to listen to them. Wishing to make things pleasant, the missionary readily assented, and gave a large order for coffee to be ready at a certain time Then commenced the sermon, which was of the usual order of such discourses: -Benoni's translation, however, is worth repeating, for that was indeed quite novel. The preacher, after each impressive sentence, made a pause, when Benoni, with an exact imitation of the worthy man's style, performed his duty of interpreter by addressing the people thus in Arabic :-"This is an Englishman, who has come to talk to you. Listen to him; and when he has done he will give you coffee." (Missionary again.) -"He is a madman. What he is saying is al ronseuse : Lut when he is done he will give you coffee." (Missionary again.) - Do not fear, There is no harm in what he says, and when he is done you shall all have coffee." (Missionary again.) -He is not a magician, he is only a poor English madman. What he says can hurt no one, and he has ordered an abundance of coffee." (Missionary again.)-" Have patience, it will soon be over now. He is getting tired, and then every one can drink as much as he likes of coffee." And so on to the end of the discourse. The missionary was perfectly satisfied with the attention with which be had been listened to, which he considered evinced a remarkable readiness on the part of the poor benighted Moslems to be instructed in the truths of Christianity. The Moors, to whom it was no trial to sit for an hour listening to what they did not understand a word of, were also perfectly satisfied with the "madman's" coffee, of which they partook to their hearts' content. Benoni ponketed his fee, and TOUSE, SHIP, AND STEAMBOAT no doubt satisfied his conscience with the reflection that his mode of translation was much the safest and pleasantest for all parties. A more correct interpretation might have made it fare ill both for preacher and interpreter,-

WHY THE NEW YORK PANIC HAP-PENED AT THIS PARTICULAR MOMENT. (Economist, October 4th.) There is a great tendency to exaggerate the more sensational elements of the American panic, and to elevate what were really secondary accidents into the main cause of the catastrophe. It is quite true that there have beenassociations of "Bears," who wished to lower the value of securities; that these associations were very successful; that the fall in the prices of securities which followed their efforts ruined many; and it is also true that the comparative smallness of the quantity of money at New York and the great number of securities which are there held upon borrowed money make that market exceedingly sensitive, and give such combinations at times a power in it which they Arbrouth. do not elsewhere possess. But, nevertbeless, if a system of banking is really sound, combinations of stockbrokers will never ruin it. There is a substantial power in rest money which has always defied, and will always defy, the worst assaults of depreciating speculators.

The fundamental cause of the New York. panie was the peculiar combination of inconvertible Government paper and of Government interference in the trade of banking which wo mentioned last week, and which we now describe elsewhere. This is a constant cause of augmenting weakness, from which the credit system at New York has long been suffering, and which, from its nature, was sure to break it down. But chronic causes of this kind are always sided in their action by minor and momentary influences, and so it has been here: There has been a buge speculation in railways at New York and in other cities of America which has been very beneficial to the country. because it has covered its surface with railways, which eventually will probably pay, and which are sure to be very beneficial to the districts in which they lie, whother they pay or not. But to the finance market this great and sudden creation of railways has not been equally advantageous. An unusually large amount of railway stock is held in New York on borrowed money, and this has made the market even more sensitive that usual, sensitive as it commonly is. It is certain thatthe firms which have failed were deeply engaged in this railway speculation, and it has been believed that many other banks have advanced more largely on railway scourities than they ought. And this has stimulated the panic against them. But if they had retained a good bunking reserve, and had used it freely, they. THE undersigned having been appointed Chalmers' Vocabularly contains about 16,000 would in all likelihood, have suffered no coal danger, and would have -readily surmounted alarm. But this reserve they did not possess, and their present banking law, though it requires them to keep it, makes that keeping all but impossible, and renders it quite impossible for them at time of need to Too much attention cannot be paid to the currency and banking laws of the United States at this moment, because they are, in truth, a chronic source of weakness, from which I ambard-street is always exposed to injury. Extracts. THE LITTLE HAND. MUS. HONORIA MARSHALL. That hand of thine, my precious child, How oft its soft caress I woo. And ask, with many a bope and four. What is that fittle hand to do? How duetile, soft, unworn by toil, The ready instrument of play. It executes the funcies quaint-I That makes thy life one holiday. It rolls the ball, it guides the pen, And ciphers strange our deftly trace. And oft, with warm affection's gust, It londly strokes my careworn face. The mimic arms it well can wield, And rein thy small and steady steed, And when we con the lettered page, Points to the tiny words we read. And in thy parents' hands 'tis clasped And pillows oft thy rosy cheek 'When slumbers spell is on thee laid. Twill not be always thus, my boy, For real life has other tasks-What is that little hand to do? Once more thy yearning mother asks. Is it to guide the seaman's bolm. Or point the gun 'mid flashing swords'; And clothe thy thoughts in living words Will it be hard and worn with toil? or pale with sickness' livid has? Oh! could thy mother's heart divine What is that little hand to do! But might her fervent prayer prevail, Unsullied should that hand remain-Clean from corruption's sinful touch. And pure from every sinful stain. Still ready for thy master's work, The servant of a willing mind. More prompt to give than to receive,

"It is a curious setout from first to last, as seen by English eyes. Every girl who is not very particular has her regular "spoon," her male property, with whom she takes the air, parades at tea-fights and flower-shows, the theatre, promenados, and church, and used generally as an object with which to inspire envy in the breasts of those unwise virgins who have neglected to secure such furniture to their own especial use. These last are seen basely stulking with younger sisters, or, O ignominy! actually hiding under the shadow of their mothers' wings. But that is a rare sight indeed, for 20 per cent. it is a curious fact that Jersey papas and mammas are conspicuous by their absence; and though we are bound to believe they tf 1617 Hongkong, lat October, 1873. exist somewhere, still one is tempted to think they are covered up like the satin chairs in a parvenu's drawing-room, and only visible on state occasions. I have seen them at balls sitting in virtuous ranks against the wall, patient martyrs, sighing for the supreme hour of supper, but never with their daughters bosides them, unless the latter were hopeless wall-flowers. Jêrsey is great at scandal:

five-o'clock tea is the hour most sacred to its rites. This island is not liberal in its entertainments, but a banquet of thin bread-and-butter and rather weak tea is spread at some house or other all the week through, and any friend can go who likes. Then a reputation is sworn away between sips of bohea, and the latest elepement, fiascos, and matrimonial successes are critically discussed. Notes are compared about Miss Nobody's paint; it is decided to a day when Captain Somebody and Mrs. Anybody are going to clope; and it is related how and why Mr. Blank threw over Miss Dash, having positively refused her hand three times, and many stories follow which it would ill become me to repeat!

But then no one has any character in Jersey:

it was talked to shreds long ago; and as everybody is in the same plight, it would be ridiculous to complain of a common ill.-

CUSTOMS OF THE ASHANTEES. According to native traditions, the Asliantec tribe, about 150 years ago, was pushed out of its original possessions by more powerful clans from the east, and after much hard fighting, at length worked its way up to the and the sea. The term Gold Coast, where the Ashantees dwell, is derived from the richness with which that metal is distributed over the soil. It is found almost entirely as dust, and is obtained by the women, who employ a very primitive process of surfacewashing, whereby about three or four times as much as they collect is wasted. weights made use of in buying or selling seeds called "tilikissi," and each person has his own apparatus, for cheating abounds both as regards the metal and the weights-When night and morn our prayer is pray'd; the former being often debased in value and the latter false. The quantity found annually is very great, and used in savage profusion: the ornaments manufactured having no pretence to design or any artistic merit whatever. The great nobles at state core monies carry such an amount of gold about them, in the shape of bracelets, that they are obliged to rest their arms upon the heads of reigners to work their mineral treasures, and would rather lose them altogether than permit the white man to derive any advantages from his superior skill in such matters They have a curious name for a mulatto whom they heartily despise. According t the Ashantees he is indeed a man of metal being "a white-black man, silver and copper, and not gold." It is only the well-to-do classes which make any attempt at dress. The costume of a chief or captain has been described as consisting of a vast double plume of eagles' feathers, surmounting a sort of belmet made of rams, horns gilt in a spiral pattern, and tied under his chin by a strap covered with the small shells called "cowries. He carries a bow and a quiver of poisoned arrows, with an ivory staff, carved spirally The cry for rest has always been louder On-his breast he wears a number of little than the cry for food.
